About Us

The DeZIM Institute is a non-university research institute that was set up in 2017, covering the topics of migration and integration. As a federal establishment similar in nature to a government research department, it undertakes research and development activities in particular regarding policy on families, equality, children and adolescents, senior citizens, and civic engagement.

The Department of Consensus and Conflict at DeZIM Institute examines the causes, representations, and practices of migration as well as the societal consensus and conflicts in the context. It also analyzes patterns of opinion and behavior on an individual level, in group dynamics, and in collective action. A specific focus lies on the combination of interdependent demographic variables (i.e., gender, class, origins, religion) in conflict and consensus processes.
